START MEMO NOM-POST-OBJ: Denis Brunel's participation in the IV program would help him better understand U.S. policies on electricity and gas as well as stress to him the importance of Europe's cooperating with America on such issues for their mutual advancement. The project will sharpen Mr. Brunel's knowledge of American perspectives on current and future energy issues, develop a range of contacts, and help ensure a balanced view of the U.S. in someone of future influence on the politics of energy in France and Europe.

START MEMO NOMINATING-JUSTIFICATION: Two factors make Denis Brunel, a hardworking and driven professional, an indispensable candidate for an IV program: his professional focus on energy issues and his involvement in politics. These factors have been part of his life since his time as a university student.
After completing his university studies in Management and in Politics, where he specialized in Human Resources Management while at the same time holding down a job, he became an expert in professional relations at Electricite de France. This adeptness later led him to a position at the French Association of Electricity and Gas Producers where he now holds the title of Secretary General of the Human Resources Committee. On top of this, Mr. Brunel is also a General Delegate of the French Center for Electricity, a lobbying association made up of various electric companies.
Throughout his life, Denis Brunel has been deeply involved in politics. At a young age he joined Chirac's party, the Rassemblement pour la Republique (RPR), and eventually worked his way up to vice-president of the RPR's youth movement; a position he held from 1985 till 1993. He later translated this experience into a successful run for the city Counselor of Valence. Always looking to the future, he next invested his energies in the Association PanEurope France, which is the French branch of the Union Paneuropeenne Internationale. This organization is dedicated to the promotion of European ideals and goals through debates and publications, and focuses especially in the important and expanding domain of science and technology. This is very important to U.S. interests because securing the technological frontier is an important aspect of the United States' national security. Furthermore, it is desirable that an individual who heads up the French branch of an organization encouraging European unity also comprehend U.S. policy as fully as possible.

Denis Brunel is now approaching a turning point in his career and is exploring advancement opportunities at EDF. His future could also be influenced by the fact that he has close ties to Nicolas Sarkozy, the new head of the UMP and possible future President of France. As someone who has been in, and will likely again be included in, political committees to devise strategies for French energy issues, he is also in a position to be considered for a future cabinet counselor. Clearly, it would be advantageous to give a person with political leadership experience, technological understanding, and ties to the French and European political establishment a chance to participate in a program that could further his positive views of the U.S. and pass what he learns on to the UMP, France, and Europe at large.
